

Community and charitable leaders share the impact of partnership and support

Friday, April 15, 2016 – Georgia Power has released its second annual Citizenship Report highlighting community programs and volunteer efforts in 2015.

Focused on the theme Citizenship Matters, the report outlines how and why the company is committed to improving the communities where we live, work and serve. It also spotlights the work of some of Georgia's leading community and charitable organizations.

"At Georgia Power, we strongly believe that being a citizen wherever we serve is as much a part of our business as delivering safe, reliable and affordable electricity to our 2.5 million customers," said Mike Anderson, senior vice president of Community & Corporate Relations for Georgia Power. "We have an obligation and a shared dedication to make a positive impact in our communities and 2015 was an outstanding year thanks to the efforts of our employees and retirees."

In 2015, Georgia Power and the Georgia Power Foundation Inc., helped nearly 2,000 diverse organizations enrich local communities and the lives of thousands of Georgians by investing more than $17 million in communities and nonprofit organizations statewide. Additionally, 6,000 Georgia Power employees and retirees contributed a record 160,000 hours in volunteer service.

The 2015 Citizenship Report highlights the company's five key focus areas and includes notes from community and charitable leaders emphasizing the importance of Georgia Power's support. You may also click here to learn more about Community and Corporate Relations.